ADVISES REARRANGEMENT OF ACOUSTICAL MATERIAL

Dariel Fitzroy, consulting acoustical engineer of San Rafael, California, said in his talk at the annual Stanford conference on school planning that putting acoustical materials over the entire ceiling surfaces of our school rooms is a waste of money.

According to Fitzroy, the same acoustical materials would be twice as effective if one-third of it were placed in the ceiling, one-third on one wall, and another third on one of the other walls.

Fitzroy also pointed out that lack of acoustical planning in school design is most often due to a lack of knowledge of what it can actually accomplish. What the designers many times believe to be acoustical planning isn't real planning at all, it's salesmanship by the distributors of acoustical materials.

SCHOOLS NOT MEETING NEEDS OF RURAL CHILDREN

The 12,000,000 children attending rural schools throughout the nation do not have a school program to fit their needs but have instead a carbon copy of curriculums developed in and for city schools.

This is the opinion expressed by the late Fannie Wyche Dunn, long time professor of rural education at Teachers College, Columbia University, in the 1951 yearbook of the Department of Rural Education, National Education Association. The book is entitled "The Child in the Rural Environment."

"Country children have a rich and varied background for firsthand experiences with natural and physical sciences, in animals, birds, insects, rocks, soils, plant fertilizers, weathering, machinery, and electricity. Certainly science should have an important place early in and throughout the curriculum, if rural children are to improve environment," she wrote.

The yearbook explains the extent and makeup of the rural population. In addition to those living in the open country, the term also includes families dwelling in all villages and towns up to 2,500 population.

Copies of the yearbook, paperbound, sell for $2.00. Clothbound, $3.00. Order from Department of Rural Education, 1201 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.
